JUGENE SUE'S NEW NOVEL .-

UGENE SUE'S NEW NOVELL.—

AVARICE. Price 25 cents. This able work concludes the popular series of the Capital Sins, consisting of Pride, Envy, Anger, Madeline.

"This forms the last of the series of the Seven Capital sins, in which Sue has depicted the enormities of prevailing vices, and yet has contrived to extract the jewel, even out of the most hashroome and repulsive vices. Avarice is an equally successful effort with the former ones to establish the author; theory The sin of avance fields its illustration in a father, who amasses all for a son. The supposed death of the partent puts the young man into possession of boundless wealth, which he uses only as the means of doing good to the afflicted and the needy. The father's like is preserved, and he is made a 'better man' by seeing how nobly his son uses the wealth, and the moral is really unexceptionable."

NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

"Although the brilliant style of Reynolds must necessarily attract attention to all that comes from his pen, yet the present work has intrinsic merits which invest it with peculiar interest, and must make it p polar beyond precedent."

"This little work, besides the charm of its style and composition, such as Reynolds alone can give, has the merit of opening new and highly interesting scenes. It lifts the veil of social life, and give us a climpse at the senetuary—the inner temple—which by no means in creases our feelings of reverence for human conduct." [Critic, "This book holds up a "mirror to nature," wherein many a mistress of the family, whose placid temper and sweetness at disposition the world never doubted, would do well to regard her own features."
